INSTITUTIONAL DISTINCTIVENESS

Archive: The Bethune College Archives, established in 2006 with support from Government of West Bengal, houses a remarkable collection of rare files documenting women's education and empowerment in colonial India. Among its treasures are rare manuscripts dating to the college's inception in 1879, including correspondence from revolutionary students like Pritilata Waddedar and Kalpana Dutta, documents related to the Simon Commission protests, and letters between pioneering educator Pandit Ishwarchandra Vidyasagar and Chandramukhi Basu, one of India's first female university graduates. The Archives also contain historical books from 1765 and preserve the stories of numerous women revolutionaries who studied at Bethune College while fighting British colonial rule. With several files already digitized and catalogued, this repository serves as an invaluable resource for researchers studying the evolving role of women in Indian society and the broader sociopolitical transformation of the subcontinent during the colonial period.
